the island is calling

Words by Guenivere Decena

Oneness is made up of many different things.

It is pure and simple. Yet the simplicity of its wholeness refracts in society's prism of separatedness; diminishing it into specificities, shrunken into types, classes and other such boundaries, equated only by words like 'all' or 'everything,' neither which ever sufficing to capture the majesty of its meaning. Only through listening to nature can these complexities be harmonized in all its beauty and depth.

But how do we listen to nature? How does She speak?

"The Island is Calling" is the exhibition component of a widened environmental preservation effort focused on Danjungan, a protected island located in Cauayan in the southern Negros Occidental. Under the vision of PRRCFI (Philippine Reef and Rainforest Conservation Foundation, Inc.), local scientists and artists explore the convergence of experience-centered programs such as marine and wildlife camps, artist retreats, science workshops and educational tours within the island sanctuary. The exhibit's collection of rotonda artworks are one of the many fruits of this endeavor.

Nature communicates through the interconnected ecosystems of which we are intricately a part of. Her language is life itself. We are part of what She is. Seeking her voice is like a dancing leaf wondering when the wind will come.

Every now and then, in the silence of our thoughts, we sense Nature's perpetual presence. She talks directly to our emotions, letting us feel we are connected beyond our human understanding. We feel truth in our oneness even if we have yet to grasp it in full.

We hear Her from the abyss of our beings... And from the beingness of every other form of life.

We hear Her in the air... On the land... And in the seas...

In us.

All around us.

She is calling.

About Danjugan Island

Diverse ecosystems on this 43-hectare island and its surrounding reefs provide a refuge for wildlife that are otherwise threatened in the mainland of Negros.

Danjugan's story began in 1994 when it was acquired through crowdfunding led by Gerry Ledesma, inspired to save a tree where the island's resident sea eagles were nesting. The Philippine Reef and Rainforest Conservation Foundation was then formed to be the keeper of the island, encompassing that tree and all the flora and fauna in it.

For more than 27 years now, Danjugan has been home to a breathing beach forest, lush seagrass beds, 14 species of mangroves, more than 70 species of birds, 10 species of bats, 500 species of corals and 200 species of fishes. Coconut crabs, endangered giant clams, the humphead wrasse or Mameng, nesting sea turtles, and reef sharks are a few key species thriving in this wildlife sanctuary.

The island has also inspired thousands of people of all ages through its environmental education and ecotourism experiences in about three decades. As Danjugan serves as nesting grounds for wildlife, it also has become a memorable place where budding environmentalists seem to hatch, and where they are nurtured to speak and act on behalf of nature, beyond the island in their own communities.

Danjugan Island plays a symbolic role in preserving the natural heritage and securing a sustainable future for Negros, but it remains vulnerable to climate change. In recent years, coral bleaching has made the reefs turn ghastly white. And just in the last month the super typhoon Odette, a product of a changing climate, devastated the island. Danjugan's supporters all over the world shared to provide relief for the island's guardians, their families and their communities. They are facing difficulties in their lives and livelihood.

But beyond the hard work of rebuilding homes and facilities, there lies the challenge of recovery and rehabilitation for Danjugan Island in the years to come. The sanctuary will continue to need us, while we also need it to survive and thrive.

The iconic eagle tree has fallen because of the typhoon, but the resident sea eagles remained soaring above the island and building a new nest on another tree.

This is an invitation to find hope when it seems bleak.

Nature's message says her ability to be reborn is a superpower. We only need to listen to know how this intertwines with our own healing.

The island is calling.

We can hear it beckon - for us to be one with it, and for us to tell its story's next chapter.
